

Duality

By Kevin A. Sensenig
Draft 1.02

Things are there — you can't just break them.

If you think your action, thought, or speech is strictly independent of other things, you are taking on an incorrect view. One must be careful to consider the way the world is constantly arising.

Shibayama said, "Duality is the root of the human condition." This seems to be the way that this is so.

Things are there — if you use them, you must know how they are constantly in position with respect to other things, and constantly arising.

This begins (or completes a cycle in) the study of the Way.
